

Regional Agency for Development and European Integration Belgrade (RADEI Belgrade)

RADEI is a regional development agency founded in 2002 by The City of Belgrade. It plays a significant role in the development processes of the Belgrade Region, serving as a neutral broker and networking meeting point for public, private and civil sectors in the region. Through development, implementation and monitoring of national programs, aiming to support balanced regional development, SMEs competitiveness and the EU integration process, RADEI reached more than 50.000 clients, delivered over 18.000 consulting services, performed more than 2.000 training and 250 mentoring services.

RADEI successfully prepared and implemented multiple projects funded by the EU and other international and bilateral donors and national funds in sectors of regional cooperation, socio-economic development, entrepreneurship, youth education, competitiveness, innovation, culture and tourism.

RADEI supports the City of Belgrade in project preparation and implementation and has an active role in Serbia's accession negotiations and national IPA programming. RADEI raises awareness on the EU integration process, available EU funds conducting training on EU project preparation and preparing stakeholders for IPARD funds.

One of RADEI's focal points is the strategic development of the City of Belgrade as a region of Europe. Joint development based on sustainable use of the cultural and natural heritage of ancient Roman Roads Network along the Danube region as the main objective of ISTER is compliant with the Strategy for development of ancient Singidunum, i.e. the, today's City of Belgrade.

RADEI's institutional knowledge and contact networks (especially with local and regional institutions and development agencies from other regions) will significantly contribute to better utilisation of ISTER project results in fields such as cultural preservation and valorisation, tourism development, environmental protection, support for SMEs, innovation, research and doing business in the digital environment.
